
List of Figures and Tables

Figures

2.1.	Huaorani territory.	54
3.1.	Location of Nahua territory in the Madre de Dios/Purús basins, and twentieth-century migrations.	72
5.1.	Location of the Tamshiyacu Tahuayo Communal Reserve, Amazon River, Peru.	98
6.1.	Approximate distribution of B. gasipaes var. gasipaes (light shading) in the lowland neotropics, with the approximate distribution of valid (defined by molecular characterisation and morphometric data) and still to be validated landraces.	122
7.1.	Location of the Lecos of Apolo, Bolivia.	143
8.1.	Piaroa territorial occupation (traditional and contemporary areas).	170
8.2.	Territorial distributions of Piaroa aboriginal clans.	174
8.3.	Traditional territories of Piaroa and assimilants.	180
9.1.	The Department of Amazonas, Colombia.	200
9.2.	Routes of forced displacement used by Casa Arana bosses to transfer indigenous slaves from Colombia to Peru.	201
9.3.	The Resguardo Tikuna–Uitoto Km 6 y 11.	203
10.1.	Ese Eja traditional territory and present-day communities in Peru and Bolivia.	223
11.1.	Location of present-day Kaiabi indigenous lands (Terras Indígenas), Mato Grosso and Pará states, Brazil.	252

11.2.	Kaiabi demographic trends in Xingu Park, Rio dos Peixes and Teles Pires (1955–2000).	255
11.3.	Some Kaiabi basketry designs.	263

Tables

2.1.	Comparison of Ka’apor and Guajá names for nine species of Inga .	51
2.2.	Comparison of Ka’apor and Guajá names for three species of Theobroma .	51
2.3.	Huaorani and Quichua names for twenty-one species of Inga .	60
2.4.	Huaorani and Quichua names for seven species of Theobroma .	61
2.5.	Huaorani and Quichua names for plants growing in alluvial and high forests.	61
4.1.	Multi- and single-sited households in five villages in Amapá, Brazil.	89
4.2.	Changes in average size (in hectares) of land-use types in a sample of twelve landholdings in Ipixuna, Amapá, Brazil.	92
8.1.	Original clan (hænok^wæti) names, mountain abodes and territories.	174
9.1.	Estimated population size and ethnic composition of indigenous communities within the Resguardo Tikuna–Uitoto Km 6 y 11, Amazonas, Colombia.	198
11.1.	Plants currently used as substitutes for arumã by the Kaiabi people, Xingu Indigenous Park, Brazil.	260