This book is the result of a collective process far beyond the editors and authors alone. Every chapter is based on and informed by personal conversations with children and young people, their parents and families, who know what it is to suffer the atrocities of war. Many of these remain nameless contributors in this volume, but every author would acknowledge the humbling privilege of meeting them. They have given freely of a lifetime of experience to affirm principles of strength in suffering and humanity in wartime. Deepest thanks are due to them.

Several of the chapters started as papers presented at the 'Children in Adversity' consultation, July 2000, which was hosted by the Refugee Studies Centre, University of Oxford and the Centre for Child-Focused Anthropological Research, Brunel University. The event was funded by The Department for International Development, The Canadian International Development Agency, UNICEF, The Bernard Van Leer Foundation, The Save the Children Alliance, The Andrew W. Mellon Foundation and the Queen Elizabeth House Oppenheimer Fund. Other chapters were presented initially at the 'Child Soldiers: An Anthropological Perspective' workshop June 2000, hosted by the Center for Child-Focused Anthropology Research, Brunel University and funded by the Diana, Princess of Wales Memorial Trust. In addition, the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation generously provided the funds that underpinned the work of compiling and editing the volume. We are very grateful to all of these organisations for the support and encouragement they have given us throughout.

Especial acknowledgements are due to Margaret Okole, Thomas Feeny, Jason Hart, Brian Pratt and Dawn Chatty for their comments on early drafts of the book, editorial advice and input. Margaret Okole in particular worked tirelessly to keep the editorial process going while several of the contributors were as far a field as Canada, Afghanistan, Sri Lanka, Mozambique, Sudan, East Timor and Tanzania.

Finally, we wish to thank Emmy Werner who has been a constant source of inspiration and guidance to us throughout the production of this volume and generously shared with us her wisdom and insight.
