

CONTRIBUTORS

Nurit Bird-David studied Economics and Mathematics at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem and Social Anthropology at Cambridge University. She is currently a senior lecturer of Social Anthropology at the University of Haifa, and a visiting scholar at the department of Anthropology, Harvard University. She is the author of many articles, including on cultural-economics and its contribution to the study of small-scale indigenous economies.

Asaf Darr studied Organizational Behavior at the School of Industrial and Labor Relations, Cornell University. He is currently a senior lecturer of Organization Studies at the University of Haifa. He is the author of Selling Technology: The Changing Shape of Sales in an Information Economy, published in 2006 by Cornell University Press. His current research is on the social fabric of mass markets.

James G. Carrier has taught anthropology and sociology and has carried out research on economy in Papua New Guinea, the United States, and Great Britain. His publications include Wage, Trade and Exchange in Melanesia (U. Cal. P. 1989, J. Carrier and A. Carrier), Gifts and Commodities: Exchange and Western Capitalism since 1700 (Routledge 1995), Meanings of the Market (Berg 1997, J. Carrier, ed.), and A Handbook of Economic Anthropology (Edward Elgar 2005, J. Carrier, ed.). He is currently Adjunct Professor of Anthropology at the University of Indiana and Honorable Research Associate at Oxford Brookes University.

Metin M. Cosgel is Professor of Economics at the University of Connecticut, Storrs, CT, USA. His research interests include rhetorical analysis of the economy, particularly consumption. He has also written on the political economy of religion and the economic history of the Ottoman Empire. Recent publications of his have appeared in Explorations in Economic History (2006), Journal of Economic History (2005), Review of Social Economy (2004), Historical Method (2004), and Journal of Socio-Economics (2004). He is also maintaining a website on the “Economic History of the Ottoman Empire” (ottoman.uconn.edu). Personal Website: cosgel.uconn.edu.

LaRay Denzer is a historian of twentieth-century Africa, specializing in West African social history, with an emphasis on women’s participation in public life and governance in Sierra Leone and Nigeria. Author of the biography of Fodayegbe M. Akintunde-Igbodalo, first female permanent secretary in Nigeria, and collaborator in the mediated autobiography of Constance A. Cummings-John, mayor of Freetown, she has also published many articles. She collaborated in all of the newspaper collections for the project analyzed in this paper.

Stephen Gudeman is Professor of Anthropology at the University of Minnesota, and currently Associate Member of the Max Planck Institute for Social Anthropology. The author of six books, his most recent publication is Economy’s Tension (Berghahn 2008). He has undertaken fieldwork in Panama, Colombia, Guatemala, and Cuba, where he has focused on social life and especially economy. He works to develop an anthropological economics by focusing on culture, figurative language, local voices, formal models, and the interaction of markets and material life.

Jane I. Guyer is Professor of Anthropology at Johns Hopkins University, having served on the faculty at Harvard and Boston University, and as Director of the Program of African Studies at Northwestern. She was elected to the National Academy of Sciences in 2008. The present essay is one of a series of publications on money and modern economies in Africa, which includes most recently Marginal Gains. Monetary Transactions in Atlantic Africa (Chicago University Press 2004) and a Forum article in the American Ethnologist 34, 3: 409–21, “Prophecy and the near future: Thoughts on macroeconomic, evangelical, and punctuated time”.

Keith Hart is Professor of Anthropology Emeritus at Goldsmiths, University of London and Honorary Research Professor in the School of Development Studies, University of Kwazulu-Natal. His work in economic anthropology has focused recently on money, the internet, and informal economy. He is the author of The Memory Bank: Money in an Unequal World (2000), The Hit Man’s Dilemma: or Business, Personal and Impersonal (2005), and The African Revolution: Africa in the Twenty-first Century World (forthcoming); and is editor with Chris Hann of Market and Society: The Great Transformation Revisited (2009).

Arjo Klamer is Professor of the Economics of Art and Culture at Erasmus University in Rotterdam, The Netherlands, and holds the world’s only chair in the field of cultural economics. Prior to that and after acquiring his PhD at Duke University, he taught for many years at several universities in the US, including Wellesley College and George Washington University.

In 1984, he attracted a great deal of attention with his Conversations with Economists. In his latest book, Speaking of Economics (Routledge, 2007), he pursues themes that emerged from that book. He has collaborated with Deirdre McCloskey to promote the rhetorical perspective on economics. The Economic Conversation, a textbook forthcoming in early 2008 (Palgrave) and co-authored with McCloskey and Stephen Ziliak, employs a groundbreaking “open-method” approach to teaching first-year micro- and macroeconomics.

His current research focuses on the cultural dimension of economic life and the values of art. He is a member of the board of various cultural organizations and chairman of the board of trustees of “Het grafisch lyceum” te Rotterdam. He is actively involved in public debates in the Netherlands and is founding director of a new university, Academia Vitae in Deventer.

William Milberg is Associate Professor of Economics at the New School for Social Research in New York. He is the author of The Economic and Social Consequences of Global Supply Chains (forthcoming) and co-author (with Robert Heilbroner) of The Crisis of Vision in Modern Economic Thought.

Ruben George Oliven is Professor of Anthropology at the Federal University of Rio Grande do Sul in Porto Alegre, Brazil and fellow of the Brazilian Academy of Sciences. He received his PhD from the University of London (London School of Economics and Political Science) and was a visiting professor at several universities, among them the University of California, Berkeley, the University of Paris, and the University of Leiden. He was the President of the Brazilian Anthropological Association and the President of the Brazilian Association for Postgraduate Studies and Research in Social Sciences.

Richard Swedberg is Professor of Sociology at Cornell University, Department of Sociology since 2002. He is a Swedish citizen and his specialties are economic sociology and sociological theory. He has a law degree from Stockholm University and a PhD in Sociology from Boston College. Before coming to Cornell, he worked at the Department of Sociology at Stockholm University, where he in 1996 was appointed “Professor of Sociology, especially Economic Sociology.” His works include Max Weber and the Idea of Economic Sociology (1998), Principles of Economic Sociology (2003), and Tocqueville’s Political Economy (forthcoming in 2009). He is also the co-editor together with Neil Smelser of The Handbook of Economic Sociology (1994; 2005).