Technologies of the allied warfare in Iraq and Afghanistan, such as remote-controlled drones and night vision goggles, allow the user to “virtualize” human targets. This coincides with increased civilian casualties and a perpetuation of the very insecurity these technologies are meant to combat.

This concise volume of research and reflections from different regions across Asia, the Middle East, Latin America, and Africa, observes how anthropology operates as a technology of war. It tackles recent theories of humans in society colluding with imperialist claims, including anthropologists who have become involved professionally in warfare through their knowledge of “cultures,” renamed as “human terrain systems.” The chapters link varied yet crucial domains of inquiry: from battlefields technologies, military-driven scientific policy, and economic warfare, to martyrdom cosmology shifts, media coverage of “distant” wars, and the virtualizing techniques and “war porn” soundtracks of the gaming industry.

MIGRATION, DEVELOPMENT, AND TRANSNATIONALIZATION
A Critical Stance
Edited by Nina Glick Schiller, University of Manchester and Thomas Faist, Bielefeld University

The relationship between migration and development is becoming an important field of study, yet the fundamentals — analytical tools, conceptual framework, political stance — are not being called into question or dialogue. This volume provides a valuable alternative perspective to the current literature as the contributors explore the contradictory discourses about migration and the role these discourses play in perpetuating inequality and a global regime of militarized surveillance. The assumptions surrounding the asymmetrical transfers of resources that accompany migration are deeply skewed and continue to reflect the interests of the most powerful states and the institutions that serve their interests.

To those who seek to address the morass of development failure, vitriolic attacks on immigrants, or sanguine views about migrant agency, this volume challenges them to put aside their methodological nationalism and pursue alternative pathways out of the quagmire of poverty, violence, and fear that is enveloping the globe.

SECURITY AND DEVELOPMENT
Edited by John-Andrew McNeish, Chr. Michelsen Institute and Jon Harald Sande Lie, Norwegian Institute of International Affairs

Since 9/11 ideas of security have focused in part on the development of ungovernable spaces. Important debates are now being had over the nature, impacts, and outcomes of the numerous policy statements made by northern governments, NGOs, and international institutions that view the merging of security with development as both unproblematic and progressive. This volume addresses this new security–development nexus and investigates internal institutional logics, as well as the operation of policy. Its dangers, resistances and complicity with other local and national social processes. This volume is a necessary critique and extension of key themes integral to the security–development nexus debate, highlighting the importance of a situated and substantive understanding of human security.

During the last three decades, corporations allied with scientists and universities, national and regional governments, and international financial institutions have, through a variety of mechanisms associated with neo-liberal globalization, acted to dispossess large proportions of the world’s population of their commons’ resources and enclose them for profit making. In response, throughout the global South and in the cities of the global North, large numbers of people have formed movements to defend the commons in all their variety. The essays in this forum seek to assay strategically the situations of selected commons in a variety of diagnostic sites where they exist, the ways in which they are being transformed by the incursions of capital and state, and the ways in which they are becoming the locus of struggle for those who depend on them to survive.

THE RETREAT OF THE SOCIAL

The Rise and Rise of Reductionism

Edited by Bruce Kapferer, University of Bergen

The powerful individualist and subjectivist turn in anthropology—a turn that cannot be easily separated from larger political processes of neo-liberalism and neo-conservatism—is one factor resulting in notions of the social and of society as becoming little else than empty shells of small or no analytical value. The essays presented here, all by leading anthropologists, take a variety of positions on the matter of the retreat of the social. All demonstrate that if anthropology and other social sciences are to fulfill the task of a critical understanding of the diverse realities in which we all must live, these disciplines will find it impossible to do so without a strong concept of the social.

OLIGARCHS AND OLIGOPOLIES

New Formations of Global Power

Edited by Bruce Kapferer, University of Bergen

As corporate practices are becoming more fused with state processes, the state itself is increasingly taking on a corporate structure, as well as a more overt oligarchic character. Exploring these processes in different concrete locations, the authors show that current configurations of global, imperial, and state power cannot be understood without examining their relation to formations of oligarchic control and bring us closer to an understanding of the ways in which the nation-state is being transformed by globalization.

GLOBALIZATION
Critical Issues
Edited by Allen Chun, Academia Sinica, Taipei

The effects of globalization have led to accentuated social inequality in most first-world countries, above all the U.S. and U.K. International trade and capital flows have tended to redistribute income in ways that aggravate inequality in advanced industrialized nations where relative income levels of the salaried middle class and the working class are being eroded, resulting in a downward mobility of these classes. Informed by an anthropological, humanistic perspective, the contributors in this provocative volume offer critical analyses and alternative visions.

THE WORLD TRADE CENTER AND GLOBAL CRISIS
Critical Perspectives
Edited by Bruce Kapferer, University of Bergen

Numerous humanly caused destructions of just the last hundred years dwarf the World Trade Center disaster, and the attention addressed since may appear disproportionate to some. But the significance of events is always determined by the social, political, and cultural forces that are articulated through a particular event. This volume offers provocative assessments of the reaction to the event from a variety of perspectives that will no doubt stimulate the continuing debate on the meaning and consequences of 9/11.
