Disrupted Landscapes State, Peasants and the Politics of Land in Postsocialist Romania

Stefan Dorondel

"This is clearly the best study on the environmental history of Romania published to date. It is a paragon of vivid, illustrative, and intimate local history combined with an international outlook." · Joachim Radkau, Universität Bielefeld

The fall of the Soviet Union led not only to new regimes of ownership and development but to dramatic changes in the landscape itself. This study focuses on the emblematic case of postsocialist Romania, in which the transition from collectivization to privatization profoundly reshaped the nation's forests, farmlands, and rivers.

Stefan Dorondel is a Senior Researcher at the Francisc Rainer Institute of Anthropology Bucharest.

Managing the Unknown Essays on Environmental Ignorance

Edited by Frank Uekötter and Uwe Lübken

"This is an interesting and well written set of essays that provides fresh and illuminating insights on many important topics, which makes it indispensable to practitioners and students of environmental history across the globe." · Tom Brooking, University of Otago

Information is crucial when it comes to the management of resources. But what if knowledge is incomplete, or biased, or otherwise deficient? How did people define patterns of proper use in the absence of cognitive certainty? Discussing this challenge for a diverse set of resources from fish to rubber, these essays show that deficient knowledge is a far more pervasive challenge in resource history than conventional readings suggest. Furthermore, environmental ignorance does not inevitably shrink with the march of scientific progress: these essays suggest more of a dialectical relationship between knowledge and ignorance that has different shapes and trajectories. With its combination of empirical case studies and theoretical reflection, the essays make a significant contribution to the interdisciplinary debate on the production and resilience of ignorance.

Frank Uekötter is Reader at the School of History and Cultures of the University of Birmingham.

Uwe Lübken joined the Rachel Carson Center for Environment and Society in 2009 and currently serves as Director of the project "Disaster Migration in a Historical Perspective".

Cycling and Recycling Histories of Sustainable Practices

Edited by Ruth Oldenziel and Helmuth Trischler

"This book's conceptual framework is truly innovative and makes a much-needed intervention in the vast literature on sustainability. Writing against the 'techno-fix mentality' that dominates so many contemporary environmental discourses, the editors persuasively argue for the need to resurrect 'older technologies for a new purpose.'" · Edward D. Melillo, Amherst College

In recent years, activists and policymakers have increasingly turned to mobilizing older technologies in their pursuit of sustainability, and waste recycling and bicycles both exemplify this development. This series of fascinating case studies traces the twin histories of biking and recycling, providing valuable context for today's policy challenges.

Ruth Oldenziel is Professor of American and European History at the Eindhoven University of Technology.

Helmuth Trischler is Head of Research of the Deutsches Museum in Munich.

Powerless Science? Science and Politics in a Toxic World

Edited by Soraya Boudia and Nathalie Jas

"Each chapter is written by an authority on the topic and contains primary bibliographic sources. Overall, the scientific content is accurate and free of obvious partiality." · Choice

In spite of decades of research on toxicants, along with the growing role of scientific expertise in public policy and the unprecedented rise in the number of national and international institutions dealing with environmental health issues, problems surrounding contaminants and their effects on health have never appeared so important, sometimes to the point of appearing insurmountable. This calls for a reconsideration of the roles of scientific knowledge and expertise in the definition and management of toxic issues, which this book seeks to do. It looks at complex historical, social, and political dynamics, made up of public controversies, environmental and health crises, economic interests, and political responses, and demonstrates how and to what extent scientific knowledge about toxicants has been caught between scientific, economic, and political imperatives.

Soraya Boudia is Professor of Sociology at Université Paris Descartes (Sorbonne Paris Cité).

Nathalie Jas is a Senior Researcher at the French National Institute for Agricultural Research (INRA).

The Nature of German Imperialism Conservation and the Politics of Wildlife in Colonial East Africa

Bernhard Gissibl

"This is a truly outstanding study of a topic that has been only tangentially treated in the literature. Gissibl draws upon an impressive body of evidence, weaving sources together seamlessly without letting the details occlude the main arguments and conceptual direction." · Jane Carruthers, University of South Africa

This is the first book-length study analyzing the origins of Tanzania's wildlife conservation under German colonial rule. It examines the shift of wildlife policies from exploitation to preservation. By situating East Africa's conservation in a global context, The Nature of German Imperialism shows how colonial policy helped to shape international conservationist efforts.

Civilizing Nature National Parks in Global Historical Perspective

Edited by Bernhard Gissibl, Sabine Höhler
and Patrick Kupper

"This volume impresses with a well written, fascinating and remarkably multi-faceted story about one of the globally most successful nature conservation policies." · Sehepunkte

Shifting the focus from the usual emphasis on national parks in the United States, this volume adopts an historical and transnational perspective on the global geography of protected areas and its changes over time. It focuses especially on the actors, networks, mechanisms, arenas, and institutions responsible for the global spread of the national park and the associated utilization and mobilization of asymmetrical relationships of power and knowledge, contributing to scholarly discussions of globalization and the emergence of global environmental institutions and governance.

Bernhard Gissibl is Postdoctoral Researcher at the Leibniz-Institute of European History in Mainz.

In the Name of the Great Work Stalin's Plan for the Transformation of Nature and its Impact in Eastern Europe

Edited by Doubravka Olšáková

"By focusing on the Eastern European experience, this book offers an original angle on the 'Stalin Plan.' Its case studies are substantial, covering a considerable amount of ground and presenting new empirical findings." · Jonathan Oldfield, University of Birmingham

Following Stalin's lead, the newly communist states of Eastern Europe pursued a total "transformation of nature" in the 1940s and 1950s intended to improve agricultural outputs. This richly detailed volume follows the history of such projects in Poland, Hungary, and Czechoslovakia, exploring their varied, but largely disastrous, consequences.

Fault Lines Earthquakes and Urbanism in Modern Italy

Giacomo Parrinello

"An extremely interesting and well-written book, which takes two major Italian disasters in detail and uses them to tell a series of stories about urban change, the state, national identity, and other issues . . . The author is passionate about the subject matter he is dealing with—and the material itself is red hot." · John Foot, University of Bristol

Although earthquakes can have disastrous effects on human lives and environments, they can also significantly influence urban development. This book follows the history of two Italian seismic disasters — the 1908 Messina earthquake and the 1968 earthquake in the Belice Valley, Sicily — exploring plans preceding the destruction and the urbanism that emerged from the ruins.

The Upper Guinea Coast in Global Perspective

Edited by Jacqueline Knörr and Christoph Kohl

"The contributions to this volume cover a great diversity of topics from multiple perspectives. It constitutes a welcome addition to the literature on the Upper Guinea Coast, particularly by taking an anthropological approach to a region that has for the most part been studied historically."
· Philip Jan Havik, Instituto de Higiene e Medicina Tropical, Portugal

For centuries, Africa's Upper Guinea Coast region has been the site of regional and global interactions, with societies from different parts of the world engaging in economic trade, cultural exchange, and conflict. This book examines how such encounters have continued into the present day, identifying the disruptions and continuities in social phenomena that have resulted.

Beyond the Lens of Conservation Malagasy and Swiss Imaginations of One Another

Eva Keller

"Beyond the Lens of Conservation is an original and important contribution not only to the literature on parks and development generally but on the frictions and contact zones of the modern world, where people, despite good intentions, seem to continue to engage with their imaginaries and schemas rather than the realities of other people whose lives are affected by those well-intentioned policies. Scholars and general readers alike should find the book accessible and thought-altering." · Anthropology Review Database

This ethnography examines how the cooperation between a national park in Madagascar and a Swiss zoo is perceived by ordinary people at either end. One view focuses on power and history, the other on morality and progress. Nature conservation therefore widens the gap between people in the North and South.

Eva Keller is currently a Research Fellow at the Department of Social Anthropology at the University of Zurich.

Life as a Hunt Thresholds of Identities and Illusions on an African Landscape

Stuart A. Marks

"This is a superb book. It brings together Stuart Marks' detailed long-term work on hunting and other issues among the Bisa of the Manyamadzi Corridor of Zambia since the 1960s." · Robert K. Hitchcock, Michigan State University

The landscape of Zambia's central Luangwa Valley has been crafted over centuries by the Valley Bisa who live there. Stuart Marks explores an emergent dissonance with the inconvenient conventions and myths of conservationists, administrators and philanthropists who seek to intervene in Africa's environmental and wildlife crises on new terms and with technical means.

Environment and Citizenship in Latin America Natures, Subjects and Struggles

Edited by Alex Latta and Hannah Wittman

Published in Association with the Centre for Latin American Research and Documentation (CEDLA), Amsterdam

"This book is a major contribution to our understanding of environmental politics in Latin America. The chapters present a wealth of original research that shows that environmental concerns are part of the daily life of indigenous populations and other grassroots groups. The theoretical frame of environmental citizenship provides a compelling way for thinking about how their environmental demands are closely linked to their national identity, political participation, land and resources." · Kathryn Hochstetler, University of Waterloo

This volume is the result of a collaborative endeavour to advance debates on environmental citizenship, while simultaneously and systematically addressing broader theoretical and methodological questions related to the particularities of studying environment and citizenship in Latin America. Providing a window onto leading scholarship in the field, the book also sets an ambitious agenda to spark further research.

Alex Latta is an Associate Professor in the Department of Global Studies at Wilfrid Laurier University.

Hannah Wittman is an Associate Professor in the Faculty of Land and Food Systems and the Institute for Resources, Environment and Sustainability at the University of British Columbia.

Ecological Migrants

The Relocation of China's Ewenki Reindeer Herders

Yuanyuan Xie
Foreword by Ping Hao

Reindeer-herding Ewenki hunters have lived in the forests of China's Greater Khingan Range for over three hundred years. They have sustained their livelihoods by collecting plants and herbs, hunting animals and herding reindeer. This ethnography details changing Ewenki ways of life brought first by China's modernization and development policies and more recently by ecological policies that aim to preserve and restore the badly damaged ecologies of western China. Xie reflects on modernization and urbanization in China through this study of ecological migration policies and their effects on relocated Aoluguya Ewenki hunters.

Yuanyuan Xie is Lecturer in the Department of Sociology, China Agricultural University.

Reclaiming the Forest

The Ewenki Reindeer Herders of Aoluguya

Edited by Åshild Kolås and Yuanyuan Xie
Foreword by F. Georg Heyne

"This edited volume is the first book-length, English-language publication devoted to [the Ewenki] and makes a very welcome addition to the growing ethnographic literature on northern Asia's indigenous peoples...

The book strikes an elegant balance between history, contemporary social commentary, and original narratives by members of the Ewenki community... This valuable contribution is ideal for acquainting the broader world with one of China's least-known minority groups, for anthropologists and social historians as well as readers hoping to learn something new about Asia's modern pastoral peoples. Highly recommended." · Choice

The reindeer herders of Aoluguya, China, are a group of former hunters who today see themselves as "keepers of reindeer." To some, their future seems troubled, but this volume's literary and academic contributions instead focus on the present, as the Ewenki attempt to reclaim their forest lifestyle and develop new forest livelihoods.

Ogata-Mura

Sowing Dissent and Reclaiming Identity in a Japanese Farming Village

Donald C. Wood

"In his densely detailed, long-term study of Ogata-mura, Wood has taken us a lifetime away from the first studies of Japanese villages carried out by foreigners in the 1930s and 1950s... Wood presents an excellent analysis of the conflict between the view held by some residents that farming is a way of life and the conviction by others that it is a business like any other." · Asian Anthropology

Based on seventeen years of research, this book explores the process of Ogata-mura's development from the planning stages to the present. An intensive ethnographic study of the relationship between land reclamation, agriculture, and politics in regional Japan, it traces the internal social effects of the village's economic transformations while addressing the implications of national policy at the municipal and regional levels.

About the Hearth

Perspectives on the Home, Hearth and Household in the Circumpolar North

Edited by David G. Anderson, Robert P. Wishart, and Virginie Vaté

"Each chapter offers something interesting for the reader... One can list bright and sometimes provocative ideas put forth by each contributor... The main advantage of this book is the ability to spark interest among the most diverse groups of specialists in the field of indigenous cultures." · Social Anthropology/Anthropologie sociale

Based on years of in-depth research, this book presents and analyzes how the people of the circumpolar regions conceive, build, memorialize, and live in their dwellings. This book seeks to set a new standard for interdisciplinary work within the humanities and social sciences and includes anthropological work on vernacular architecture, environmental anthropology, household archaeology and demographics.

Waterworlds

Anthropology in Fluid Environments

Edited by Kirsten Hastrup and Frida Hastrup

"A superb book, the chapters provide a wide range of approaches, from excellent descriptive ethnography to hard-hitting critiques of development practice.

Water's qualities provide a common theme and inspire groundbreaking theory." · Marc Brightman, University College London

In one form or another, water participates in the making and unmaking of people's lives, practices, and stories. Contributors analyse the union of water and social lives, thereby challenging anthropologists to foreground the mutable character of their subjects and responsibly engage with the generative role of cultural analysis.

Environmental Anthropology

Engaging Ecotopia

Bioregionalism, Permaculture, and Ecovillages

Edited by Joshua Lockyer and James R. Veteto

"The contributors look beyond techno-fixes to ask deep questions about underlying cultural ontologies that...will undoubtedly resonate with and inspire students; [this volume] is highly recommended for use in both undergraduate and graduate courses in anthropology and environmental studies."

· Culture, Agriculture, Food and Environment

Using case studies from around the world, the contributors—scholar-activists and activist-practitioners—examine the interrelationships between three prominent environmental social movements: bioregionalism, a worldview and political ecology that grounds environmental action and experience; permaculture, a design science for putting the bioregional vision into action; and ecovillages, the ever-dynamic settings for creating sustainable local cultures.

NIMBY Is Beautiful

Cases of Local Activism and Environmental Innovation Around the World

Edited by Carol Hager and Mary Alice Haddad

"This new edited volume provides an innovative, empirically driven perspective on controversial facilities that will be of interest to many scholars, decision makers, and residents around the world. The volume's international perspective helps make its conclusions convincing and robust and it rests on a well developed set of theories and hypotheses." · Daniel P. Aldrich, Purdue University

NIMBY (Not In My Back Yard) protests are often criticized as parochial and short-lived, generating no lasting influence on broader processes related to environmental politics. This volume offers a different perspective. Drawing on cases from around the globe, it demonstrates that NIMBY protests, although always arising from a local concern in a particular community, often result in broader political, social, and technological change.

The Social Life of Water

Edited by John Richard Wagner

"The Social Life of Water successfully addresses a wide range of issues concerning the meanings and uses of water in relation to culture, society, and development. As a volume, it shows how a focus on social life opens up new analytical possibilities of broader relevance to the study of water. Moreover, many of the chapters explore contexts and regions not previously covered in work on these topics." · Journal of Royal Anthropological Institute

Relying on first-hand ethnographic research, the contributors to this volume examine the social life of water in diverse settings and explore the impacts of commodification, urbanization, and technology on the availability and quality of water supplies. Each case study speaks to a local set of issues, but the overall perspective is global, with representation from all continents.

Transactions with the World Ecocriticism and the Environmental Sensibility of New Hollywood

Adam O'Brien

"This valuable work engages fully with the field of cinema studies and demonstrates ways of building on traditional film theory from an ecocritical perspective. The author speaks the language of film aesthetics, provides sophisticated analyses that go beyond cursory readings of plot and narrative, and directly engages with film technology and its impact on textual meaning." · Stephen A. Rust, University of Oregon

In their bold experimentation and bracing engagement with culture and politics, the "New Hollywood" films of the late 1960s and early 1970s are justly celebrated contributions to American cinematic history. Relatively unexplored, however, has been the profound environmental sensibility that characterized movies such as The Wild Bunch, Chinatown, and Nashville. This brisk and engaging study explores how many hallmarks of New Hollywood filmmaking, such as the increased reliance on location shooting and the rejection of American self-mythologizing, made the era such a vividly "grounded" cinematic moment. Synthesizing a range of narrative, aesthetic, and ecocritical theories, it offers a genuinely fresh perspective on one of the most studied periods in film history.

Adam O'Brien teaches Film Studies at the universities of Bristol and Reading.

At Home in Postwar France Modern Mass Housing and the Right to Comfort

Nicole C. Rudolph

"The vast amount of information, the coherence of the narrative, the elegance of the writing, the soundness of [Rudolph's] judgments, and the significance of her story to our understanding of France's 'trentes glorieuses' suggest that this will be a book that will make a difference to people's thinking about the era." · Steven Zdatny, University of Vermont

After World War II, France embarked on a national project of modernization, which included the development of mass housing. At Home in Postwar France reveals how modernizers saw the home as a site for social engineering and nation-building, and identifies the emergence of a "right to comfort" that shaped new expectations for well-being.

Nicole C. Rudolph teaches French Studies at Adelphi University in New York, where she directs the major in International Studies and the minor in European Studies.

Housing and Belonging in Latin America

Edited by Christien Klaufus and Arij Ouweneel

The intricacies of living in contemporary Latin American cities include cases of both empowerment and restriction. In Lima, residents built their own homes and formed community organizations, while in Rio de Janeiro inhabitants of the favelas needed to be "pacified" in anticipation of international sporting events. Aspirations to "get ahead in life" abound in the region, but so do multiple limitations to realizing the dream of upward mobility. This volume captures the paradoxical histories and experiences of urban life in Latin America, offering new empirical and theoretical insights to scholars.

Christien Klaufus is Assistant Professor of Human Geography at CEDLA.

Arij Ouweneel is an Associate Professor at CEDLA and was special Professor of Historical Anthropology of the Amerindian peoples at the Universiteit Utrecht from 1999 to 2004.

The Great Reimagining Public Art, Urban Space, and the Symbolic Landscapes of a 'New' Northern Ireland

Bree T. Hocking

"This is a timely, relevant and thorough examination of how urban space is constructed and contested in 'post-conflict' Northern Ireland. Hocking shows through deft engagement with ethnographic and documentary material how post-Good Friday Agreement policy has been dominated by attempts to create spaces that are amenable to tourists and capital, but also the limits of such initiatives in a context where ethno-national division remains a salient feature of everyday life for many." · Peter Geoghegan, University of Edinburgh

Offering a detailed ethnographic account of Northern Ireland's post-conflict visual transformation, this book examines the official effort to produce new civic images against a backdrop of ongoing political and social struggle. Interviews with politicians, policymakers, community leaders, cultural workers, and residents shed light on the deeply contested nature of seemingly harmonized urban landscapes in societies undergoing radical structural change. Here, the public art process serves as a vital means to understanding the wider politics of a transforming public sphere in an age of globalization and transnational connectivity.

Bree T. Hocking is an anthropologist and journalist who writes on the intersection of art, spatial politics, and society.

Elusive Promises

Planning in the Contemporary World

Edited by Simone Abram and Gisa Weszkalnys

"This is a much needed contribution by anthropologists to a sustained and broad treatment of planning as a socio-cultural process, utilizing multiple case studies from multiple perspectives and theoretical frames." · Juris Milestone, Temple University

Planning in contemporary democratic states is often understood as a range of activities, from housing to urban design, regional development to economic planning. This volume sees planning differently—as the negotiation of possibilities that time offers space. It explores what kind of promise planning offers, how such a promise is made, and what happens to it through time.

Simone Abram is Reader at both Durham University and Leeds Met University.

Gisa Weszkalnys is Assistant Professor in the Department of Anthropology at the London School of Economics.

Narrating the City

Histories, Space and the Everyday

Edited by Wladimir Fischer-Nebmaier, Matthew P. Berg, and Anastasia Christou

"This is an extremely solid and well-informed collection that brings together pertinent and timely case studies that all shed light on the interconnections between the everyday and urban narratives. The scope is expansive and interdisciplinary, and the framework is explained well and in detail." · Markus Reisenleitner, York University

With a focus on new research, this book explores the history of non-elite populations in cities from Caracas to Vienna, and Paris to Belgrade. Contributors' research both asks classical socio-historical questions and takes narration seriously, engaging with novels, films, local history accounts, petitions to municipal authorities, and interviews with alternative cinema activists.

Wladimir Fischer-Nebmaier is Research Project Leader in the Department of History at the University of Vienna.

Matthew P. Berg is Professor of History at John Carroll University.

Anastasia Christou is Associate Professor of Sociology and member of the Social Policy Research Centre and FemGenSex research network at Middlesex University.

'City of the Future'

Built Space, Modernity and Urban Change in Astana

Mateusz Laszczkowski

"'City of the Future' is the first of its kind. As a long-awaited comprehensive account of the rise of Astana... it is a remarkably thoughtful and thought-provoking book. Laszczkowski is a skilled ethnographer and he recounts his rich and insightful research in a style that captivates and challenges readers to think outside the box." · Natalie Koch, University of Syracuse

The long-awaited comprehensive account of the rise of Astana, the capital city of Kazakhstan, this book argues for an understanding of space as inextricably material- and-imaginary, and unceasingly dynamic – allowing for a plurality of incompatible pasts and futures materialized in spatial form.

Mateusz Laszczkowski is Assistant Professor at the Institute of Ethnology and Anthropology, the University of Warsaw (Poland).

Street Vending in the Neoliberal City

A Global Perspective on the Practices and Policies of a Marginalized Economy

Edited by Kristina Graaff and Noa Ha

"Overall, this is an excellent book. The collection of essays the editors have brought together is quite impressive . . . The quality is consistently high, and the originality and richness of the writing is very compelling." · Jonathan Shapiro Anjaria, Brandeis University

From a multifaceted, global, and transnational perspective, the volume examines street vending and urban policies around the globe, comparing practices in the Global South to that in the Northern hemisphere. Essays show that though street vending activities vary depending on site-specific regulations, this urban practice also reveals global ties and developments.

Kristina Graaff is Assistant Professor of American Studies at Humboldt University of Berlin, Germany.

Noa Ha is Researcher at the Center for Metropolitan Studies, Technical University of Berlin.
