

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Words cannot express the depth of my gratitude to the many people—colleagues, mentors, family, and friends—who have helped bring this book to fruition. My special thanks go to Pam Maclean, David McCooey, and Keith Beattie for all their interest, encouragement, insights, and advice. I must also express my deep appreciation for the help and hospitality of the survivors and volunteers at the Jewish Holocaust Centre in Melbourne, particularly Phillip Maisel, Lena Fiszman, and Warren Fineberg. Another lifelong friend I have been blessed with finding through the writing of this book is the indefatigable Mirna Cicioni, whose passion for Primo Levi is rivaled only by her amazing generosity, of which I am an undeserving beneficiary. Heartfelt thanks are owed to Graeme Kinross-Smith, Heather Hallam, and Tess Mahar, whose support over the years has been invaluable. Tony Chalkley, Toija Cinque, and many others—far too many to name—ensured that my engagement with this somber topic did not entirely distract me from the lighter side of things. Special thanks are also due to wider circles of family and friends—thank you for your patience; you will now see me more often. My sincere gratitude goes also to Marion Berghahn, Ann Przyzycki DeVita, Elizabeth Berg, Lauren Weiss, Melissa Spinelli, Adam Capitanio, and all other editors and reviewers—known and unknown—who contributed to this book at various stages.

I am indebted to my parents, Vicki and Graham, for the opportunities they have constantly made possible, at great sacrifice. Everything I do must bear my gratitude to them. Likewise, my brother Luke's consistent late night/early morning phone calls and my sister Abbie's all-too-transparent and equally comforting sarcasm have continually kept my feet planted firmly on the ground. To have parents and siblings as I have defines that which is truly humbling. And to Deb: your tolerance, support, and far superior knowledge of the English language have been invaluable and hardly something I could ever hope to equal. I love you very much.

Lastly, to Tiffany, whose calming presence has seen me through good times and bad for as long as I can remember and without whose company I would undoubtedly be stumbling in the dark, unaware of where I am, until my head thumped into a heavily padded wall ...
