

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book has been a long journey, in which I travelled to, and stationed myself at, various sites of research and academic work. Originally conceived and undertaken at the 'Riccardo Massa' Human Sciences Department, University of Milan-Bicocca, this journey has traversed several other institutions. In addition to the Milan-Bicocca departmental unit in sociocultural anthropology led by Prof. Ugo Fabietti, my sincere thanks go to my colleagues at the Department of Anthropology and Philology, University of Latvia, and at the Centre of African Studies, ISCTE, in Lisbon. I am grateful to have received from the Zentrum Moderner Orient in Berlin the opportunity to write up the book in such an intellectually stimulating environment. In the Gambia, the National Centre for Arts and Culture (NCAC) hosted me as a visiting researcher and offered professional advice on archival material. Field research was financed by Unidea Foundation via CREAM (Milan Centre for Ethno-Anthropological Research) and the University of Milan-Bicocca; the Ethnological Mission in Benin and West Africa (MEBAO) of the Italian Ministry of Foreign Affairs; Germany's Federal Ministry for Education and Research (BMBF, funding code 01UG0713). The author is, however, entirely responsible for the content of this publication.

I wish to express my deep gratitude to Prof. Alice Bellagamba for her unstinting support, valuable advice and illuminating insights throughout this journey. Numerous people have provided critical commentary on earlier versions of this work or parts of it; in particular, I gratefully acknowledge: Riccardo Ciavolella, Knut Graw, Claudia Mattalucci, Laura Menin, Filippo Osella and Pierluigi Valsecchi; and three anonymous reviewers selected by Berghahn. Jonah Wedeking and Nigjar Marduchaeva helped me with editorial issues, while Penny Ann McKeon and Theo Barry-Born provided linguistic assistance; although any flaw is solely the responsibility of the author, I thank them for their help. I also offer this book as a humble homage to a passionate scholar and teacher, the person who taught me what anthropology is a long time ago: Umberto Primo Censi.

Countless persons have contributed to my research in the Gambia. For hospitality I warmly thank the Sidibe family in Serekunda and the Sumbunu family in Sabi. My hosts – Alhaji Bakari Sidibe and Alhaji Suleyman ‘Jukung’ Sumbunu – have not only provided assistance with logistical and research-related issues; they have been true mentors in my fieldwork. I am deeply saddened by the premature loss of Jukung and my inability to show him the product of our innumerable conversations. May the pages that follow bear memory of this exceptional man and his advice for the future generations of Sabinko. I am most indebted to Musa Sumbunu, Amara Kaira and Alagie BK Sillah, my closest collaborators and friends; without them I would not have been able to continue my fieldwork. I also thank Facuru Sillah, Ibrahima Silla, Billay Tunkara, Fatumata Kamaso and Haji Sumbunu for translating some of the audio material. The Sabi branch of Youth With A Mission (YWAM) has provided me with invaluable support and information; a special thank goes to Erik Brohaugh for his assistance with maps and data. It would be simply impossible to name and acknowledge all the people who have helped me during my time in the Gambia, nor can the few pages that make up this book do justice to the wealth of their knowledge and the depth of their insight. To all the Sabinko and all the Gambians who shared their ideas with me and spared their time for the sake of my research, I simply say: nuwari moxo siri.

A journey is above all a human endeavour. I am therefore grateful to my friends in Italy and elsewhere for making it a more humane task through their warmth and their cheerful presence... and for trying to keep me away from my laptop from time to time. I could not have pursued the profession of an academic without the unfailing support of my family, my parents, Francesco and Giuseppina, and my siblings, Lisa and Nicola, as well as their partners and their beautiful children. Words cannot suffice to thank them for what they have done for me; I carry their values, love and encouragement with me during my peregrinations. Finally, appearing at the end of this journey, Imke has not only helped me in completing this manuscript; she has taught me what walking together along the path to the future means.
