

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The project that became this book began as a series of articles (Reyna 2005; 2009a, 2009b, 2009c, 2013) derived from presentations at a number of conferences, including the Ernest Gellner Seminar (Prague, Czech Republic, June 2004); a Presidential Session of the 105th Annual Meeting of the American Anthropological Association (San Jose, CA, 15–19 November 2006); the Anthropology of Globalization Symposium, held by the Bremer Institut für Kulturforschung, University of Bremen (Bremen, Germany, 25 April 2008); the Humboldt University Social Science Seminar (Berlin, Germany, 19 June 2008); the Free University Social Anthropology Seminar (Berlin, Germany, 26 June 2008); the international workshop Re-Appraising World Market Production, held at the University of Bern (Bern, Switzerland, 18 June 2009); the colloquium Cosmopolitanism in the Landscape of Modernity, held at the Davis Center for Historical Studies, Princeton University (Princeton, NJ, 26 September 2009); and the Culture, Power, Boundaries Seminar at Columbia University (New York, NY, 15 April 2013). I would like to thank the participants in these sessions for their helpful comments.

Over years, R. E. Downs has gradually taught me to write. My understanding of warfare and global systems has benefited from discussions with Jonathan Friedman and R. Brian Ferguson. Eric Wolf, Günther Schlee, John Gledhill, John Eidson, Andrea Behrends, Rafael Kandiyoti, Ayse Caglar, Joe Lugalla, Keir Martin, Markus Hoehne, Christiane Falge, and Patrick Neveling all helped at different times to develop the arguments in Deadly Contradictions. I wrote portions of text while working in the Integration and Conflict Group of the Max Planck Institute for Social Anthropology (Germany). I have the greatest affection for this place, whose staff have nurtured me for many years. Other parts of the book were written in my time with the Humanitarian and Conflict Response Institute of the University of Manchester (UK), where colleagues were always stimulating. I wish to thank Samuel Bordreuil of the Laboratoire Méditerranéen de

Sociologie and Anne M. Lovell of the Institut National de la Santé et de la Recherche Médicale for their kind support of a period of research at the Maison Méditerranéenne des Sciences de l'Homme in Aix-en-Provence, France.

I thank librarians at the University of New Hampshire for their kind assistance over the years. Anett Kirchof of the Max Planck Institute for Social Anthropology library has been extraordinarily supportive. Karen Alexander and William Leavenworth, as have Jaime Taber, have been exceptionally helpful in preparing the manuscript for publication.

Finally, my wife Nina Glick Schiller and I are like two sturdy entwined vines (some might say weeds), supporting each other while growing out of a soil that turns out to be a common project. Of course, any work has its faults. These are my extravagances.
