

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to thank Murray Smith, whose insight, literacy and clarity will always be a benchmark for my own career as a scholar, Aylish Wood for her invaluable advice on structure and signposting, and Tamar Jeffers McDonald for her support. Thanks also to Malcolm Turvey, whose integrity and thoroughness pushed me to improve my own standards. Chris Chappell, Amanda Horn and everyone else at Berghahn have also been tremendously helpful, and I also thank the anonymous reviewers for their generosity both in praise and constructive criticism.

All of my teachers should be thanked by name, but I will single out Alan Fair and Gareth Palmer, both of whom sparked the flame in me that continues to burn. I will also mention Ted Nannicelli, Lilly Husbands and Miriam Harris, whose names I am proud to be attached to as co-editors. I thank Sarah Haywood, who introduced me to Tim Smith, who introduced me to SCSMI, which changed my life's course. Thanks to the SCSMI community as a whole, in particular Jason Gendler, Catalina Iricinschi, Diana Mirza, Andreas Lindegaard Gregersen, Joe Kickasola and William Brown.

My gratitude also goes to Joseph Anderson, whose trailblazing work was pivotal in inspiring my own research. Thanks to Dominic Topp, from whom I have learned a great deal, for his friendship and many interesting conversations. Thanks to Luke Dunmall and Caleb Turner for some of the happiest evenings I had while working on this manuscript. A special mention also goes to Karen Burke, Stephen Crowe, Daniel King, Leon Waksberg, Andrew Butler, Hayley Lismore, Suzy Mangion, Sabina Sitoianu, Michael Knox, Chris Bourton, Keeley Saunders, Mike Keeling-Smith, Jamie Finn, George Conyne and Manuela Thoma for their longstanding friendships. Many thanks to Sumit Sarkar and Kirsty Garland for their illustrations used in this book, and to Phil Solomon for his guidance, friendship and generosity of spirit.

Gratitude is also due to my colleagues at the AUB, and my students over the years at Salford University, Kent University and the Arts University Bournemouth, who have confirmed to me that my chosen profession was also my true calling. My mother, father, step-parents, sister, nephew and in-laws all need to be thanked for their ongoing love, support and inspiration. To my mother – who knew those evenings spent at the Broadway Cinema in Nottingham would lead to my eventual career! Noelle, my lighthouse in the mist, continues to shine the way for me while Atticus, Ezra and Bast are the best travel companions I could hope for.

Special mention also goes to Al Rees and Jason Simpkins, both of whom I had the pleasure of knowing all too briefly while working on this manuscript. I was moved by Al's authority on experimental film paired with his informality and kindness when discussing the subject. His passing was a loss to the field, as well as to those who knew him. Jason was a good friend for the first two years of my research; he fought hard for what he believed in, and he loved the movies. I continue to miss him.
