

Contents

List of Tables	vii
List of Abbreviations	viii
List of Contributors	xiii
Foreword	xiv
Introduction. German Historians and Central European History in North America after 1945	1
Karen Hagemann and Konrad H. Jarausch
Part I. German (Migrant) Historians in North America since 1945: Careers and Academic Institutions
Chapter 1. Labor Migrants, Explorers, and Academic Intermediaries: German Historians in North America since 1945	21
Karen Hagemann
Chapter 2. Transatlantic Mediators or Scholars Abroad? The German Studies Professorship Program of the DAAD in North America	43
Andrea A. Sinn
Chapter 3. German Politics on the Potomac: The Foundation of the German Historical Institute and Transatlantic Exchange	63
Scott H. Krause
Part II. Transatlantic Academic Migration: Individual Narratives
Chapter 4. Generation of 1938: The Trials and Tribulations of Teaching and Researching Modern German History in Three Academic Cultures	87
Völker R. Berghahn
Chapter 5. Inadvertent Intermediary: Becoming a German Historian in the US	104
Konrad H. Jarausch
Chapter 6. Recentring a German Academic Career: From Munich and Berlin to Toronto	122
Irmgard Steinisch

Chapter 7. My Transatlantic Life: The (Mis)adventures of a Military Historian Michael Geyer	141
Chapter 8. Gender Historian by Passion, Professor and Migrant by Chance Karen Hagemann	161
Chapter 9. German-American Identity and the Demise of National History Thomas Kühne	182
Chapter 10. From East Berlin to West Los Angeles: An Unexpected Journey Wolf Gruner	201
Chapter 11. Moving Transatlantic: Episodes, Encounters, and Experiences Andreas W. Daum	221
Chapter 12. Straight Outta Niederbayern: Writing Gender History on the US West Coast Ulrike Strasser	240
Chapter 13. Professors, Post-structuralism, and the “Postwar”: A Transnational Academic Career in the Age of Globalization Frank Biess	258
Chapter 14. Going East and Going West: A Central Europeanist in the US Gregor Thum	278
 Part III. Transatlantic Scholarship: Key Themes and Debates in Twentieth-Century German History
Chapter 15. A Transatlantic “Second Repression”? Postwar Migrant Historians and Writing about National Socialism and the Holocaust Helmut Walser Smith	297
Chapter 16. Reexamining the Transatlantic Scholarship on Modern German-Jewish History since the 1970s Thomas Pegelow Kaplan	317
Chapter 17. Writing the History of Post-1945 Germany from Across the Atlantic: Entangled Histories and Critical Perspectives Anna von der Goltz	339
Appendix. List of German-Born Migrant Historians in Canada and the United States	359
Selected Bibliography	379
Indexes	391